

Case Study John Lynch

My personal experience of the NEBOSH National Diploma in Occupational Health and Safety.

My story:

The resources and support provided were excellent with particular praise for the support and lecturing ability provided by British Safety Council trainer, Kevin Evenett.

I would recommend British Safety Council for the quality of their resource materials, and the supportive environment provided at the venue.

I had little need to contact my account manager but when required he was always helpful.

The approach I took to studying and preparation was "little and often". The amount of detail and work required is daunting and the only way to get through it is to work steadily and to make a start.

The most useful advice I would offer would be to obtain a copy of all of the previous exam papers and the examiners comments and to go through the previous questions. This is time consuming but I felt it the best way to test my knowledge and to understand the type of question you are likely to face.
